Chicago-to-Astoria Trip "Rediscovers Inland Empire's" Place in Nation

Indian Celebrations

Apart from the formal ceremonies there was a succession of Indian events which would make of any celebration a thing of the gayest sort. To the people of the East the Indian is history. But to the people of the Dakotas, Montana and Washington the Indian is an interesting neighbor, the embodiment of color and pageantry.

The Columbia River Historical Expedition had as one of its leading members Maj.-Gen. Hugh L. Scott, who for 50 years has lived among the Indians, has fought with them and befriended them, has learned their sign language and understands their character. And in all the celebrations of which they were a part, General Scott was a part also, communicating with them in their picturesque sign language, which is the esperanto of the American Indians.

The greatest falling off in Amer ican exports of motion-picture films was in the quantity taken by the United Kingdom, a drop of about 20,000,000 feet. This helped to place Latin America ahead of Europe as a market for American films. The Far East showed a

It is this question and others just as important to every store manager and individual customer, which will form the subject of an intensive study in 12 of the largest retail establishments in Boston to be made by the retail trade board of the Chamber of Commerce in co-operation with the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston and the National Retail Dry Goods Association.

Bargain sales, while they may draw to the stores more pairons than can be attracted by any other special inducements, are not without their drawbacks, according to Boston merchants, to meet commerce, lower cost level, special sales from stock, job lot purchases, shopworn, soiled or damaged, chase shopworn, soiled or damaged, the study store and the customers, style or model pieces, remnants, consolidating price lines, other causes.

This dafa will be studied carefully, the reasons why certain merchandise does not sell well and ought to reflect itself in closer approximation of what people want so that their needs can be more adequately supplied.

One element in markdowns, known to have been a leading factor, was the faulty sizes sent stores by manufacturers. On July 1 standard forms were adopted for sizes, however, by the Boston stores, and since that time garments sent to the stores have been much more satisfactory, with

To determine, therefore, the economic wisdom of that long-accepted friend of the bargain-hunter, the markdown sale—if indeed it be a friend—the Boston Chamber's Retail Trade Board voted at its meeting at Young's Hotel today to undertake this survey.

MEN AND WOMEN NEEDED ON FARM

Now is the time, in my estimation, to study agriculture. There are opportunities for trained young men. One of the unfortunate facts, brought out in investigations, is not only that the enrollment in agriculture has fallen, but that the enrollment of country boys and girls in all courses has dropped.

"The cities and towns are furnishing college and university enrollments. This is not a healthy situation. Country boys and girls are entitled to as good training as city boys and girls. Moreover, the Nation needs the wholesome influence of a well-trained rural youth. If a country boy does not want to study agriculture, there are plenty of other things for him to study.

"I realize the financial difficulty encountered in the last few years by farmers. I know that thousands of farm families cannot afford to send their children to college. But where a boy has a chance to earn his way, there is no better investment for the future of American farming and American culture generally."

By a Staff Correspondent WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 3-Local autonomy for the Filipinos with a plebiscite on the question of complete independence after a term of years, is the solution of the Philippine question urged by Newton W. Gilbert, formerly Acting Governor-General of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Gilbert explained, prior to his address, that if the islands are given a considerable period of practical self-government, perhaps for 30 years, and if the burning question of independence is removed from immediate politics he believes the Filipinos will come to realize their economic advantage from staying under the sovereignty of the United States and will vote to remain in that status in a plebiscite.

Says Roman Catholic Clergy "Provoked Conflict" by Rebellious Attitude

By the Associated Press

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 3-President Calles has refused the Roman Catholic episcopate's proposal that the Government suspend its regulations pending a plebiscite, but influential personages are seeking informal exchanges between the episcopate and Government officials.

In a statement to the Associated Press, the President says: "This Executive bas already made "Inis Executive has already made known his opinion regarding the religious situation. Since the priests departed from the churches there have only been small numbers of worshipers in the churches of the capital. This is considered in some quarters as possibly due to reaction from the extreme emotional experiences of recent days when enormous crowds prayed in every Roman Catholic church.

A number of priests, although without churches, are remaining in their parishes. They are wearing civilian clothes and living in the homes of relatives or friends or in homes of relatives or friends or in boarding houses. They are prepared to officiate in a private capacity when parishioners need their services. Many of the clergymen are assuming lay occupations until church services are resumed again. Some have left or are leaving Mexico, but apparently not in large numbers

Now Aspecial rate on Gas—for Home Heating

I IERE—at last—is the real solution to the ever-recurring problem of keeping your home warm and comfortable in all kinds of weather.

Now there is a rate for Gas which makes this cleaner and more convenient fuel as advantageous for heating as for cooking.

New—instead of the difficulties of obtaining hard coal, and the attendant dust and dirt of coal and ashes-

Now—instead of having to keep a certain head of fire regardless of the temperature of the weather—instead of paying for your fuel from six to nine months before you use it—and instead of the thousand and one annoyances incident to your present method of heating—

You can have a fuel that is uniform and dependable—that takes up no room, .makes no smoke and leaves no dirt-a fuel and a service paid for monthly.

In a word-almost every consideration you can think of is just another reason why you should use Gas for building and house heating

Three things, however, should be thoroughly understood:

First-Only a heating plant designed for Gas may be used for house heating—the installation of a gas burner in an existing furnace is not practical at the present time.

Second-Each installation must be handled as a separate case—no standard specification will fit all houses.

Third—Gas fuel may cost more than hard coal, but the advantages much more than offset additional

In fact—the best way to get a real idea of the advantages of Gas fuel and the new special rate for building and house heating—to get the correct idea of what this will involve and how you will benefit from it—is to talk with our engineers, give them an appointment for a survey of your house-heating requirements, let them determine what equipment may be necessary, and estimate what it will cost to install and use Gas to heat your house.

An interview with one of our experts will cost you nothing.

It is one of that familiar type of farce which depends on the exploitation of a feminine character at once domineering, vague and volatile, yet not without a steady awareness of her own interest. Mr. Lewis' novel has perhaps fared better than most transmogrified tales is it possible that the had the screen in view when he wrote it? Certainly it has many incidents obviously of film value. It would be eurious if an artist who rejected the Pulitzer prize because he did not like the terms on which it was awarded aboutd then produce a novel, with a view to screen use. Yet it is perhaps even more extraordinary that he had actually permitted motion picture audiences to receive his story with an altered ending which no doubt fits the director's notion of happy, but which is neither logical nor artistic. Then, of course, there are other modifications, presumably necessary for the films. How could irony, for example, be projected on a screen?

ing the emphasis rather on the farce than on the comedy of the author's description, Miss Newcombe won unstinted approval from the audience.

The plot, doubtless familiar to many playgoers, is in close accord with the nature of the principal rôle. It concerns the inevitable complications arising from the reappearance of a first husband after his wife had acted on the assumption, deduced from his disappearance, that she is free to marry again. This Enoch Arden, after straightening out the heart affairs of his daughter, departs leaving everything else as before; except that the second husband has evidently conceived the hope that he too may find opportunity to disappear.

One Test Is Sought of Each British Child in Elementary School

Special from Monitor Bureau LONDON-The annual conference of the Association of Education Com-mittees in England and Wales, which was recently held at Harrogate, made decisions on two important subjects. The first of these was the vexed ques-tion of individual examinations for children in elementary schools. The conference passed a resolution af-firming the desirability of children being submitted to an examination in the main subjects of the curriculum at least once during their elementary school life, and advising local au thorities to institute such examina

The importance of the resolution lies in the fact that it is a distinct breach with the policy of "inspection rather than examination." This policy has held sway in the elementary schools of the country since th; abolition of "payment by results" which was the bane of English elementary education 30 years ago. The system of payment by results with system of payment by results, with the annual individual examinations which it involved, was swept away because of the fact that it was found to be thwarting all attempts to achieve educational progress and to develop a liberal culture in the

At the last conference of the National Union of Teachers a resolution was unanimously adopted declaring that a reversion to the examination system "would be ugeducational to the last degree, inasmuch as the abolition of the system has been justified by the consequent great advance in educational aim, method and product."

That resolution was passed only method and product."

That resolution was passed only two months before the decision of the local authorities' conference referred to above. There is thus a direct conflict of opinion between teachers and administrators on a question of fundamental importance in education. Mention must not be omitted of the fact, however, that it is not the re-establishment of the annual examination of every pupil that is demanded by the authorities, but only the examination of every pupil once in his elementary school career. In support of this policy, the suthorities say that there is a danger of teachers undervaluing accuracy, thoroughness and exact knowledge, which qualities are required above all for an examination.

The other resolution carried by the conference was one asking that the difficulties arising in many areas owing to the administrative relations between church schools and local education authorities should be alleviated by an enabling act empowering local arrangements to be made to suit local conditions. This refers to the difficulty now being experienced by the owners of church schools in finding money to put the buildings in proper structural repair. The owners are being pressed to hand them over to the local authorities, but they are rejuctant to do this unless the specific denomination of the schools can in some way be preserved. An enabling act would

LADY ASTOR VISITS GIBSONS IN MAINE

Free From Political Cares at Indian Landing

DARK HARBOR, Me., Aug. 3 (A) Parliament, today was free from political cares at Indian Landing, the summer residence of Charles Dana Gibson, the artist, on Seven Hundred Acre Island, across the habor. Coming from Boston, where she ar-rived from England with four of her children, she began a month's vaca-tion with her sister and brother-in-law in picturesque Penobscot Bay.

The party left the Boston steamer at Camden, transferred to 'Mr. Gibson's speed powerboat and were taken to the little island, on one end ments in other directions.

The curse of the canal system had been divided ownership, and until they could get the main traffic routes unified regarding direction it was not to be expected that money would be spent on developing them to give the canals a fair chance. It would not, however, take a very great deal of money to put them into proper working order. Sometimes when he thought of the millions poured out so freely every year on the roads, which were immediately ground into powder under the wheels of traffic he thought how admirably some of it could be spent in bringing the waterways up to date.

DOWER SEAT FOR CROWN PRINCESS

STOCKHOLM (Special Correspondence)-Although the Crown Prince and Princess of Sweden have their winter residence in the royal castle in Stockholm, they have two in the fertile Province of Scania the other the newly renovated Ulriksdal Castle, not far from Stock holm. In connection with a grant of the Riksdag for the restoration of the old castle of Ulriksdal, it was decided that it should become, as it was termed, "dower seat for the Crown Princess of Sweden." The Crown Princess of Sweden." The restoration work, commenced in 1916, was not completed until 1921. When the Crown Princess Louise came from England as the second wife of the Crown Prince of Sweden, the castle stood newly restored and ready for her occupancy. From its inauguration, the Crown Prince showed a great interest in the work, not only in the forming of plans but even in the treatment of the details and the color schemes of the tails and the color schemes of the arious apartments.

It was the Crown Prince himself who designed the fireplace in the who designed the hreplace in the large and comfortable sitting room. The form of this fireplace is based on and constructed after, the style of an old cast-iron hearth, a very beautiful piece of work, found in a strap heap. "The aim has been to maintain everywhere in Ulriksdal the type of an old castle, at the same time creating a comfortable and up-to-date modern home of a noble character, said the restoring architect, Count Sigge Cronstedt, to a repre-sentative of The Christian Science Monitor. "To this end the old hall, for example, together with the adjoining rooms, were transformed into a large hall of a more pronounced English type. The Feudal Knights Hall was provided with a new roof with rough beams, thus making a large, comfortable sitting room."

The dining room has been wainscoted high with oak, and the fireplace here is a genuine English one, specially imported. In the writing room the old panels have been kept intact and the walls have been completed with handprinted silk tapes-try. From this little intimate and beautiful room one has a charming view over the Bay of Edsviken.

With such simple detail arrangements, the rooms in the center, as well as those which are intended for living rooms, have been changed from heing more or less a museum. from being more or less a museum fato coay sitting rooms. Count Cronstedt told of many interesting incidents that developed during the work of reconstruction.

For example, when a new passage down to the celar was to be arranged on a spot suitable to the architect's plans, it was discovered that a stair-way had once existed there. The arches overhead were in place. This Tiriksdal Castle Restored and the passage reopened through a plastered-up doorway to the cellars just under the central building. while constructing a corridor to the central building from the south wing, a niche was found which originally had served to hold a statue, which adorned what formerly had been the front façade. ail the berries hanging among the prickly branches, she didn't feel quite so courageous. She started on the bush nearest and picked a few berries. Then she lifted up the branches, one by one, to see how many more berries were hiding underneath. Then she heaved a little sigh and set to work again. Somehow the little basket seemed to fill very slowly, and she couldn't help thinking how many more bushes there were after this one, and the task seemed endless.

Just then Mrs. Eastman came into the garden, holding a queerly-shaped ghas. It was round and flat on top and bottom like a circle, and sloped to the middle from both ends. like two funnels meeting in a point, and one part seemed full of fine sand.

"Here's an hourglass, Julia." she said. "Perhaps it will make the picking easier. It takes the sand just an hour to run down from the top half to the bottom through the narrow space between. Watch it run. It doesn't hurry but it doesn't stop. It just keeps right on and on, a few sands at a time, and almost before you know it, all the sands have run tirough, the hour har gone, you turn the glass upside down and the sands start running again."

Julia took the glass and walched the sands failing, a few at a time.

"They just keep right on, don't thes?" she said. "What is it for, Mrs. Eastman?"

Authority to Take Up Rails Without Hearing to Be Questioned

Boston City Council has approve an order introduced by Robert G. Wilson to ask the corporation counsel Frank S. Deland as to the authority of the Boston Elevated Railway Company to abandon surface car service and remove its tracks in (Skane) in the south of Sweden, and Registered at the Christian certain parts of Dorchester without the holding of public hearings.

This order was introduced yester-day by Mr. Wilson after petitions from the Elevated were approved for permits to operate a bus line from Washington and Causeway Streets to the South Station, and rom Copley Square to the South present routes.

Mr. Wilson, in discussing the transportation problems in Boston and the council's share in the control of the various systems, predicted that a bill will be introduced before the next session of the Legislature seeking to have the control now exercised by the City Council over the Boston Elevated vested thereafter in the State Department of Public Utilities thes.

That this is a phase of present conditions which the councilmen should watch and be ready to oppose vigorously and conclusively. Mr. Wilson insisted to be a fact. He declared that if the Department of Public Utilities should be charged with the life control in Research.

LONDON, Ont. (Special Correspondence)—A course in floriculture and gardening at universities and high schools was advocated by the Canadian Florists and Gardeners Association at the annual convention here. Delegates favored putting horticulture on the same plane as other technical professions, so that high class men might be attracted to it. In order to follow up the decision, a committee was appointed to bring the matter before the Ontario Government. Subjects suitable for the training of students in horticulture will be suggested. F. D. Clark was elected chairman of the committee and with him will be associated Prof. A. C. Tominson of the Ontario Agricultural College; Professor McLennan of that college, and Prof. Alex. Simpson, in charge of botanical work at the University of Toronto.

The convention learned from Dr. R. B. Thompson of the University of Toronto.

"RANNIE," said Julia, running into the house excitedly, "Mrs. Eastman says she doesn't want any more of her goose-berries, and that if you care for what are left on the bushes you are welcome to them."

"That's very kind of Mrs. Eastman while you pick. When they have run out, you can tarn the glass over had they list art afresh."

"That's very kind of Mrs. Eastman," said Grannie, looking up from her sewing. "We shall certainly enjoy the jam. You'd better go over now, Julie; they ought to be picked at once. Take the big basket that hangs under the stairs and a strawberry basket. Then you can pick info the small basket and empty into the larger one."

Julia's face fell. "Do I have to pick all the gooseberries, Grannie" There are lots of bushes, and they're so prickly!"

"You like the jam, don't you, dear" asiswered Grannie, "and I'm going to make ten pink pam, you wan to the condition of the small basket and empty into the larger one."

"You like the jam, don't you, dear" asiswered Grannie, "and I'm going to make the jam, you know."

"Yes, Grannie, I do," said Julia, giving her a hug and kiss, "and I'll pick, every one of there, you'll see, and I won't grumble another bit!"

Ald off she ran.

But when she got to Mrs. Eastman's when she gardens and counted the bushes—ten of them—and looked at a lit he berries shaping among the prickly branches, she didn't feel quite so courageous. The council granted a permit to Franklin L. Hart to operate motor busses from Park Square to Cambridge Street, the first link of a proposed new bus line between Boston and Albany. Walter E. Wragg said that 21 out of 23 cities and towns along the proposed route in this State, outside of Boston, had approved Mr. Hart's petitions. It was explained that the new bus route would not bring the line into opposition to the railroads, an objection which had caused Mayor Nichols to veto a similar petition some weeks ago from the same company.

four lawyers were riding to court. They were dressed in their "Sunday best," ready to make a good appearance before the judge.

As they rode under a large tree they saw two robins making a great commotion about something; then they heard faint chirps in the grass near by. Three of the men made passing remarks about young birds not being of enough consequence to even be thought of by four "good lawyers," and the three rode on.

The fourth man, according to a story in "My Bookhouse," said nothing. He dismounted and sarched in the yeeds and grasses until he found two very young in robins. New Tariff Affects Rebates. But Does Not Reduce Volume of Trade

CAPE TOWN (Special Correspondence)—During 1925 the preferential rebates granted by South Africa amounted to £917,327, of which total Great Britain received £643,194, Canada £48,777, Australia £27,291 and New Zealand £75.

These figures are of special in-terest, as it was in August last year that the new Union tariff came into full operation; and although it, is not possible to deduce from the customs statistics, now for the first time available, the extent to which the tariff has affected and is likely to affect these rebates, it seems to be clear that the new duties have in no way lessened the volume of trade between this country and Great British

WOMEN WORKERS' HOURS MAY BE CUT

British Bill Would Make Maximum 50 Hours a Week

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Aug. 3 — The hours worked by women in factories will be materially reduced if the Government's bill, which was introduced formally in the House of Commons last night, gets through in its present form.

This bill is mainly to incorporate This bill is mainly to incorporate in one act such factory legislation as has been passed piecemeal in the last 25 years. It also proposes important changes. The existing law restricts the week for women workers to a maximum of 60 hours. The present bill introduces a 48-hour week for women with a proviso that overtime may be worked up to 100 hours in a year, thus bringing the working week to an average maximum of 50 hours.

HIGH QUALITY AMPLIFIER IS EASILY BUILT

Sparate Unit Impedance Type May Be Made for Any Set

Impedance audio amplification is rising steadily in public opinion as an ideal form of obtaining good volume with excellent quality. This paper first discussed this form of amplification two years ago, suggesting it as a possible substitute for the then popular resistance type of amplifer and predicting its popularity when the proper units for its use were available.

In both the latest model of the Browning-Drake receiver and the Hurd Maptation of the same, im pedance amplification was used and many excellent reports from satis fied users have come in, as a result of these stories. A good power tube should be used with this type of an amplifier, if the utmost in tone quality is to be realized. We cannot emphasize this point too strongly, as there seems to be a resistance among many readers, due to the fact that having formed the habit of using an all-purpose tube in the past this should do for the present.

For those who are at all technically inclined we would refer them to an article on tubes about to be published on this page, which will show conclusively that a power tube must be used for really good audio amplification. of these stories. A good power tube be used for really good audio amplification.

An impedance amplifier, in which the three essential units of this type of amplifier are mounted separately, rather than combined in a single case as in the National Impedaformer, is shown in the accompanying photographs. These units consist of a choke coil, a coupling condenser and a good resistance of leak.

The latter unit, a grid leak, is worthy of some discussion. Good resistances have always been a problem in radio and poor ones the cause of a large majority of radio troubles. of a large majority of radio troubles. Moisture and atmospheric changes have been found to effect the usual leaks and the resistance materials have not been stable. This year has seen a decided step forward with the incorporation of metalized leaks in which the resistance material is fixed on a glass surface thereby giving much more stability.

An even greater step forward is the one taken by Tobe Deutschmann in the introducing of an evacuated leak on the market in which a small glass on the market in which a small glass rod is coated with a metalized re-sistance substance and then the whole is incorporated in a glass tube with wire connections to the metal end clip contacts. This tub-ing is hermetically sealed at either end and then evacuated. This keeps the resistance in a vacuum, which is an ideal location since the possibili-ties of atmospheric and temperature ties of atmospheric and temperature changes is reduced to a minimum. This leak is known as the "Tipon" leak, the name describing the small metal glass tip located on the leak where it has been evacuated. This leak is incorporated in the amplifier about to be described. Tobe condensers are used, having established a reputation for standing up under the load that strong audio currents. a reputation for standing up under the load that strong audio currents impose upon the coupling capaci-ties of an impedance amplifier. The list of parts is as follows:

parts to baseboard.

The wiring diagram is sufficiently clear, so that we believe no particular directions are required to enable the constructor to follow it. Particular care must be taken to make sure that all soldered connections are well made. If rosin-core solder is used, grasp all joints firmly after they are made and try to pull them apart, using some little force. If a joint comes apart, it should be resoldered, taking pains that all metal surfaces are bright before joining them.

The tubes to be used are shown on the wiring diagram. It is preferable to use the ones shown and to use the D. C. battery voltages indicated. If, however, the constructor prefers to use a UX-112 power tube in place of the UX-171, the C battery bias on this should be reduced to the same as that employed on the other two tubes.

In connecting this amplifier to the set, the following precautions must be observed:

1. That in the set the A-minus and 3-minus are connected together. This is not true of all sets. If in your set the B-minus is connected with the A-plus, then a similar connection must be made in the amplifier, as indicated by the dotted lines on the diagram.

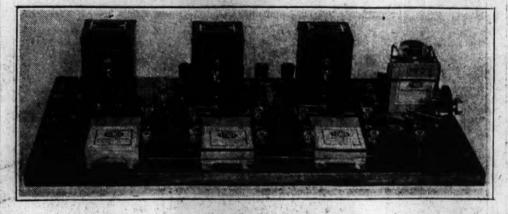

2. The B-minus should be connected to the ground connection of he set.

the set.

3. To couple the amplifier to the set, obtain a short length of double telephone cord, with oord tips on each end. Plur one pair of cord tips into an ordinary loutepeaker plus, and put this plug in the phone or detector jack on your set. Connect the other two ends of the cord to the two binding posts marked "De-

He sho called upon the Co-operative Wholesale Society's Bank to establish branch banks in every populous center of the country, and so make the bank as serviceable as the store. It had been estimated, he said, that there were 17,000,000 stockholders in Great Britain and it was said that a sum of £1,750,000,000 was placed by small investors in the Post Office Savings Bank, and other institutions. The majority of these investors belonged to the working class, thousands of whom would very much prefer to place their savings in the Co-operative Wholesale Society's Bank if its branches were broadcast as were the branches of other banks.

Educational Matters

Co-operators from the Rochdale Pioneers onward have always been interested in educational questions, and the delegates, 1900 in number, criticized the action of the Government in limiting expenditure on public education and demanded "the adoption of a more progressive policy which would enlarge the educational, opportunities for children, adolest the edirability of encouraging technical education for employees, and making the holding of certiscates a confitton of new appointments or promotions."

Congress also strongly condemned "the action of the Ministry of Labor in dissolving the two grocery and provision trade boards," and his refusal "to establish trade boards for the catering, retail, drapery and meat trades." It also demanded that the Government shall "redeem its pledge. that it would cut through wested interest by introducing legislation to deal effectually with all trusts, combines and prize-fixing associations which are acting inimically to the public interest." Finally, it urged the Government "to remove all the remaining restrictions on the importation of cattle from Canada."

Yet though its brilliant glossy surface is growing familiar and its old trade name—artificial silk, art silk, or fiber silk—are known, still its proper name of "rayon" remains anfamiliar to many people.

Rayon Defined

What is rayon? Barely a year ago turers' Association, complained that he failed to find the word "rayon" in his unabridged dictionary when he was seeking an accurate definition of the term. The word is still lacking in the dictionaries, and although President Coolidge, in his speech beof the term. The word is still lack-ing in the dictionaries, and although it is now included in the semiannual of cellulose, twisting it, and at the supplement to one of the encyclopedias, even the newspaper almanacs have not sufficiently awakened to the industry was put on its feet and fact of its importance to list it in their annual industrial statistics.

As defined by one of the largest manufacturing concerns, rayon is "a Directions for Cleansing manufacturing concerns, rayon is "a lustrous textile fiber made by converting pure cellulose into thread tenacity, or durability of silk, it is formation, by means of chemical a.id more lustrous and combines well mechanical processes." This sounds dull alough, but back of that definition lies the tale of man's dream and his search for an idea. And from this finish materials, sold under fancy dream came a product which, in less names as this or that sort of satin, than 40 years, has pushed itself into the forefront of the textile industry, not the same water-resisting quali-we water of any temperature if sweaters; the satiny stripes and fig-endure water of any temperature if ures on ginghams and voiles em-ploy this material, and it forms the satin damask patterns on most of the heavy draperies and upholstery ma-be no difficulty in washing hosiery.

Even in France the origin of the hew fiber is somewhat obscure and it will probably never be known whether the credit for the first practice of rayon was the work of the famous chemist Réaumur or of the Count de Chardonnet who, in the count de Chardonnet who in th 1884, secured the first patent. The de Chardonnet method was a nitrocellulose process, which passed the cellulose from cotton plants through a nitration process, then dissolved it in alcohol and ether and forced it through a glass tube with a very small opening. This formed a thin flament that hardened as the alcohol and ether evaporated, after which several filaments were twisted into a thread. The process was simple and promised well, but unfortunately this thread would not dye easily. Moreover it was both inflammable and explosive. People could not be per-suaded to make use a material that might suddenly take a notion to blow

Experiments Toward Perfection

For years men experimented, try-ing to remove the objectionable features of this process and by 1900 was perfected the cupro-ammonium process. But this method demanded

While the solution was known to be suitable for the manufacture of textile fiber, no particular attention was given this phase of the matter at first. A manufacturer of electric first. A manufacturer of electric light bulbs got the idea of forming viscose into a single thread and using it as a flament in electric bulbs. Although the carbon filament replaced the viscose before it had a

How It Was Discovered

Some 60 years ago the French chemists, realizing the popularity and cost of slik, began to experiment out on some flat surface instead of hanging them on a line, as the water in the drying of knitted rayors garments, it is better to spread them out on some flat surface instead of hanging them on a line, as the water in the surface of the surface in making a similar material. They in a hanging garment collects at the knew that silkworms feed on the lowest point and tends to cause a cellulose in oak and mulberry leaves stretching of the partially dry por-

So the scientists reasoned that there must be some way of reproducing synthetically chemical changes in cellulose without the aid of the silkworm. They took cellulose, which is the chief constituent of the cell walls of all plant life, and for years studied and worked with it until they found four different way of making a material that is, in many respects, similar to silk. Of course.

this new material is purely vegetable, while silk is an animal fiber.

Even in France the origin of the hew fiber is comeanable. Of course, rayon.

"Curtains made from rayon can be washed easily and safely, and as nearly all curtains and draperies are dyed fast to light, there is no danger of disturbing the color. Curtains and draperies are sometimes inclined to shrink slightly after hanging at an open window after a heavy fog or rain. This causes a crinkled appearance in places. ance in places, which readily presses out with a hot iron, and the original semblance is restored."

The Prices Are Stable

Tests have shown rayon to be un-affected by perspiration and it has the additional value of not turning yellow, as silk often does. As to wearing qualities, tests with men's shirts have revealed the cotton worn away entirely on the edges of the

since his day, efforts are made to benefit the "workingman," William Morris "yet speaketh."

The whole fabric of his existence, however, was woven together by tude. His colors are clear and strong and unfading. His characters have heroic line. His tales of Norse mythology and of Greek have epic motion. His work established a new style in English—that of vigor and clearness and absolute simplicity and sincerity.

It was, after all, to the power of the pen and the printing press he returned at last. Undaunted by the halting of his personal work for hu-manity, he established a publishing house, where he printed beautiful editions for many modern writers be-sides himself. These were the happy days at Kelmscott. To be doing still one more beautiful thing,—carrying and bound books!

It was here at Kelmscott he came back to his beloved realms of romance, publishing prose romances which were only poetry in a new form. In the library of Exeter College, Oxford, is preserved his last work, the Kelmscott Chaucer. It was five years in project, three in preparation, and a year and three-quarters in printing. It is glorified with nic-and Morris. It was at Kelmscott House that he listened to the music of virginals playing "the olden music he loved," and at the opening "broke into a cry of joy." H. M. B. H.

Down in the hollow is a gypsy wagon gay with green and gold ara-besques of painted carving; horses are tethered near and there are two white tents. Thence come the shrill, faint cries of children, with hoarser, murmurs drowned occasionally by murmurs drowned occasionally by the wind that comes up from the valley, over the shelter of the bram-bles. But the downs lie bland and motionless in the sunstine: putty-colored patches of dry soil, sudden emerald of fresh herbage, wet young grass in the pool, yellow-gold, a thin spread of coltsfoot round the water.

Beyond the farm the new forest passes from dark blue woods to azure andulations on the sky line; the sun is now striking the west gable, turning it to greenish-white, and silver-ing the pile of rough-cut timber, weathering through the seams.

HARRY I. HUNT,

A GREEK CLASSIC PLAY IN AN ANCIENT ROMAN THEATER IN ALGERIA

At Stratford-on-Avon

CHOULD any lover of Shake-Speare wish to realize more forcibly than ever before the magnitude of the Warwickshire man's achievement, both as dramatist and poet, he should betake himself, as I did, to Stratford-on-Avon, and see played them. self, as I did, to Stratford-on-Avon, and see played there, within a space of some thirty hours, masterpieces so outstanding and so varied as "Richard II." "Romeo and Julief." and "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The effect is that of having absorbed beauty to saturation point.

Yet the company now at work in the ex-cinema, which has been transformed into a comfortable temporary playhouse pending the rebuilding of strongest that Mr. Bridges Adams has succeeded in getting together. For, weakened as they are by the passing of Miss Florence Saunders, this year's gathering, though com-prising such capable and experi-enced players as Randle Ayrton and George Skillan, together with many other young actors and actresses of considerable promise, has hardly the all-round capacity of last year's team. Their chief need at present is more attention to clarity of utterance, and to the evoking of all pos-sible beauty, rhythmic and harmonious, out of the spoken Shakespearean verse. "Richard II"

Of the three plays mentioned the weakest in execution was "Richard II." mainly for the reason that the name part was insufficiently re-hearsed, and that Randle Ayrton, who took it, though quite the strongest straight actor in the company cannot easily mold his tempera ment to the fervor of pictorial imagi nation, the vacillating and egoistic caprice, the fantastic graces, the exalted self-pity, which makes this part so exactingly complex. There was a tendency, moreover, some-times to lose the rhythm by running the lines into one another, and, occasionally, to fail in balancing per-fectly the relative verbal values. Mr. Ayrton warmed to his work, how-ever, and played the deposition scene admirably well; from which point the tragedy, after languishing somewhat, regained its grip and noved on to an impressive end.

strong emotion in it, and plenty of movement, and straightway the least experienced player of them all is at his ease. Thus aided, their diction aiso improves in quality and truth. This was shown clearly in "Romeo and Juliet," when, as so often happens, the duel scene, terminating with the death of Tybalt, and the "banishment" scene, in the Friar's cell, were about the best done. In Sebastian Shaw, who played Romeo with freshness and vigor, the company have a young actor of high promise, while the Juliet of Miss Rosaline Courtneidge, though want-ing power, pleased by its girlishness, simplicity, and unfailing intelligence. Some of the gestures, in fact, seemed to be dictated too much by the intellect, and too little by the heart: but Miss Courtneidge's performance, within its limits, was sound and enjoyable.

The best of the three productions, from an all-round viewpoint, was "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which suits a young company because the parts are fairly equally divided and are full of action, humor and poetry. Bridges Adams has provided a beau-tiful forest set, and his comedy busitiful forest set, and his comedy business, with the four lovers, is cleverly and always legitimately contrived. All the so familiar, yet ever welcome, people of the fantasy were well interpreted, and some of the players—Frank Darch, as Oberon, these expenses of the players—frank Darch, as Oberon, these expenses of the players—frank Darch, as Oberon, these expenses of the players—frank Darch, as Deron, these expenses of the players—frank Darch, as Deron, these expenses of the players—frank Darch and th example-found in those exquisite lyrics opportunity to reveal a talent for which small parts, in the other plays, had hardly given scope. The play was much enjoyed by a house which included the American actor. E. H. Sothern, and his wife Miss Julia Marlowe.

Temporary Theater On March 6 of last year, at a time when preparations for the opening of the Spring Birthday Festival at Stratford-on-Avon were really well advanced, the Memorial Theater was burned down, and prompt arrange-ments had to be made for the fit-ting up of a local cinema as a temporary theater. This was duly ac-complished, and the Summer Festival performances are now being given in a house which, as regards seating accommodation at any rate. seating accommodation at any rate, is quite as commodious and comfortable as was the Memorial Theater—that building, in plain fact, have the polish capital and expressed great satisfaction with the performances which he witnessed both from annex manager manager.

nors are weighing the possibilities of the Foiss theater.

M. Gémier believes in a theater two alternatives, namely the obvious that is really in touch with the people. one of rebuilding the theater upon the same site, or else of moving to another site—which the governors it frightens away the large, public, have at their disposal—fronting the lane that leads from the Memorial gardens toward the Parish Church. If that choice were made the walls of the burned theater, which still stand, could be adapted to the construction of a much-needed building, to be used as a conference hall, and

Such an erection, connected with the existing picture gallery, which has escaped the fire, would provide so practical a use for the site that the scheme, no doubt, will receive full consideration, the great draw-back to rebuilding the theater where it originally stood—and the spot is an ideal one—being the narrowness of the available land, and the diffi-culty of erecting a playhouse which, while efficiently serving its purpose shall be architecturally pleasing at all points, while open to view, as it must be, from every direction. It, on the other hand, the alternative site be chosen, the back of a theather than the site be chosen. The back of a theather than the site be chosen.

bly than ever before the tours, however, cannot profitably be arranged, at present, and it becomes necessary, therefore, to disband the company in September, and re-en-gage it, or part of it, for the follow-ing spring.

Such a makeshift, obviously, has such a maxeshit, obviously, has many drawbacks, and it is felt that the only way to ensure the establishment of a company in which the settled Stratford policy of a balanced performance with every part well played, can be carried out, is by the creation of two, or even three permanent companies from three, permanent companies, from the second and third of which vacancies in the first can be promptly and efficiently filled.

This arrangement would have the additional advantage of providing a nucleus of young Shakespearean actors, all steadily gaining experience in their art; and, by assuring balanced teamwork, in the premier companies at least, would eventuate the state of companies, at least, would eventu-ally win for them, in the provincial cities the reputation and good will without which a winter season cannot possibly be made to pay its way. For the realization of this program, however, the company, as well as the building, must have sufficient financial backing: and, to that end, the Shakespeare Memorial Theater is appealing for the assistance of English-speaking people through-out the world. "Nell Gwyn"

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (Special Correspondence)—"Nell Gwyn," a motion picture written by Marjorie Bowen, directed by Herbert Wilcox for British National Pictures, released through Paramount, One of the finest English films yet

telling screen characterization of her career. She appears the embodi-ment of the part, romping from rags to riches with all the verve and determination that the original Nell is said to have possessed. As the story has been arranged, it tells in a terse but effective way the rise of the merry-hearted actress from her humble station to the inner circle of wealth and fashion. Once the attention of the King has been attained, she rises rapidly to almost a title: But the picture closes with the un-timely end of Charles II, and the luster and animation, her comedy methods having undergone a salutary overhauling. Today her screen tech-nique is freed from the hall-marks of her early training which had left her with obvious and hampering mannerisms. Under the happy direc-tion of Mr. Wilcox, and in the at-mosphere of the English studios, Miss Gish has decidedly come into her own. Her interpretation is au-thorizative commanding winning thoritative, commanding, winning She carries a dozen or more scenes of high comedy off with brilliant that does not seem to have stepped directly from the London of Nell's day. The costumes and settings are wholly adequate, and the picture is put together with due attention to pace and continuity. Randle Ayrton plays the part of the King, and Juliette Compton is a handsome Lady Castlemaine. Other members of the cast to be cited for their fine work are Sidney Fairbrother, Judd Green and Edward Sorley. R. F.

Gémier in Warsaw

WARSAW, Poland (Special Correspondence)—Firmin Gémier, director of the Odéon Theater in Paris, is visiting Warsaw for the purpose of entering into nearer relations with the Polish theatrical world, inviting it to join the universal theater organization initiated by the famous French actor-manager. The aim of the organization is to embrace all theatrical workers, of whatever nationality, from author, actor and manager to the humblest scene-shifter, in one large family. M. Gémier is convinced that such an action will tend toward an increase of friendship and brotherhood between peoples and nations. Rubens

Such a glimpse was supplied by the Interlude Players' production last season of Tom Taylor's "Ticket of Leave Man." a play which was first produced in London in 1863, and became a popular favorite of the day. The theme of "The Ticket of Leave Man." is the difficulty experienced by a man who has once undergone imprisonment in regaining a footing in society. It is a theme for serious drama of the kind in which contemporary writers delight; and we have an example, very much to the point, of their way of handling such matters, in the poignant fourth act of Mr. Gaisworthy's "Justice."

Tom Taylor's method strikes us today as quaintly Vicotrian. He begs the whole question at the outset, or at least weakens its force, by making his ticket-of-leave man the innocent victim of a false charge. His play is a strange jumble of sentimental and completely irrelevant songs which became the drawing-room favorites of the seventies, and he commits the enforgivable offence, by modern standards, of making the freest and most flagrant use of soliloquies and assides.

Mellow Autumn Days in Uncrowded France

"The longest gangplank in the world" leads to the country of contrasts

THE French Alps! A series of snow crested I mountains . . . and at their feet, gardens sweet with mimosa and clustered roses; smart and farfamed resorts such as Aix-les-Bains and Chamonix in the shadow of Mont Blanc . . . and rustic villages nestled in the hills.

France is a country of contrasts . . . ever new ... ever interesting. Paris with its shops and fashion shows . . . and provincial towns in mediaeval dress; the laughing charm of Savoy . . . and the towering dignity of the Pyrenees; sports, rest or social diversion...all are glorious in the mellow and uncrowded days of early autumn.

Just take a French Liner to Havre. No transferring to tenders. Down the gangplank. A train waiting to carry you to Paris in three hours. STOCK MARKET SOARS UPWARD TO NEW PEAK

General Motors Makes Further Spectacular Rise -Many New Highs

NEW YORK, Aug. 3 (P)—Stock prices displayed a strong tone at the opening of today's market. Buying orders were spread over a broad list, but manifestations of group strength first became apparent in the motors, oils and steels.

Du Pont opened 3% higher at 2921%. a high record for all time, Yellow Truck jumped 3 points to a new peak at 331%.

Truck jumped 3 points to a new peak at 33½.

Excited speculation in General Motors, which soared over 10 points to 211½ before realizing sales temporarily checked the advance, overshadowed all other developments in the early trading. Strings of transactions running from 1000 to 10,000 shares appeared on the tape at frequent intervals, total sales of this issue in the first half hour reaching nearly 100,000 shares.

Yellow Cab, which is controlled by General Motors, was another spectacular feature, extending its early gain to 6 points before the first outburst of buying had spent itself. With the average of 20 leading railroad shares at the highest level since the war, fresh buying was again attracted into that group.

Realizing Causes Break

Predictions of good business in the second half of the year by leading bankers and business men, stiffening gasoline prices and prospects of liberal "melon cutting" this fall furnished the groundwork for the advance.

Foreign exchanges opened slightly easier.

Foreign exchanges opened slightly easier.

The-violence of the early advance in some of the volatile shares caused haety realizing, which was supplemented by active selling by the professionals who were putting out successive short lines of stocks as prices crept higher. These offerings ultimately caused an abrupt break, General Motors falling 7½ from its high level and du Pont, Hudson Motors and Yellow Truck 5 to 5½.

The upward movement was resumed in a vigorous fashion at noon when United States Steel climbed to a new high record at 150, and General Motors got up to 298 after being as low as 203½ on the break.

The renewal rate for call loans was unchanged at 4½ per cent.

Bonds Generally Steady

Bonds Generally Steady

Bonds Generally Steady

The bond market continued steady today, with nothing to indicate a change from its recent even pace.

Changes for the most part were fractional. Granby 7s, however, continued to show strength and pulled up 1% points. Chesapeake & Ohio convertible 5s advanced one.

Mexican 6s, small assented, which yesterday took a dip in company with other obligations of that country as a result of the religious difficulties there, rebounded today 2% points.

French 7s were up a half, but Belgian 8s lost a like amount.

Advances of one-half to seveneights embraced Seaboard Air Line 6s.
Florida East Coast 5s, Delaware & Hudson convertible 5s, Interborough Rapid Traction 6s, Sinclair Consolidated Oil 7s and Skelly Oil 6½s.

Brooklyn Union Gas 5½s continued weak, losing 1½ and Ohio Public ervice 7½s were down five-eights and Denver & Rio Grande convertibles were off a half.

United States Government issues were easy.

WHEAT PRICES ARE OFF ON BEARISH CROP ESTIMATES

CHICAGO, Aug. 3 (P)—Lower quotations at Liverpool, together with continued notice of bearish, estimates of the domestic winter crop, did a good deal to bring about a fresh setback in wheat values today during the early dealings. Wheat buying expanded on declines in price, however, and helped to rally the market.

Opening %c to 1%c lower, wheat recovered in some cases to the same as yesterday's finish. Corp., oats and provisions were easy, corn starting unchanged to %c off and later keeping within fractional limits.

Opening grain prices were: Wheat, September, $1.38%; December, $1.43. Corn. September, 84%c; December, $8%c. Oats, September 42%c; December, 45%c.

RULE STRONG

Most Kinds Well Sold Up-Natives in Good Demand-Frigorificos Easier

Prices in the packer hide market rule generally strong. Packers last week booked light, and ex-light Texas steers, branded cows and Colorado steers at 13½c. These sales aggregated some 60,000 hides.

After these deals were recorded the market stiffened just enough to prevent belated buyers from getting their bids accepted at similar rates. Just what restrictions will be harnessed to offerings this week is a question, but it is generally believed that butting their believed that it is generally believed that butting their believed that it is expected that 13½c will huy branded cows, Colorados, and light Texas steers.

The sale and slaughter of native steers keeps just about even, hence the attempt to advance quotations to 15½c, which failed, notwithstanding that New York hide dealers sold a sizable lot of Koshers a 13c, which price equaled what the packers got for July native steers.

Light native cows are in good demand at 14c, but after several car load lots were booked at that figure, offerings went up to 14½c. When 14½c was declined traders withdrew.

Although conditions in the leather markets show considerable improvement, tanners, say that there is no profit in the business. Up to Saturday last the leather situation was still in the hands of the buyers.

The industrial list showed better but price movements were within narrow limits. The oil group hardened, with shell issues in demand. Rubber securities moved irregularly, and home rails were quiet.

A steady tone prevailed in the gittedge division. Poreign issues were firmer, being favorably affected by Premier Polineare's new financial program.

COTTON GOODS MARKET HAS IMPROVEMENT

Surplus Stocks Well Sold Tp-Prices Continue in Upward Trend

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Aug. 3—Despite the forced liquidation, at retail, of large quantities of summer goods made of cotton, and of mixtures of cotton and silk and cotton and rayon, and the heavy losses that were taken in moving much of this specialty merchandise, dry goods markets as a whole during the month of July showed such marked improvement that confidence in the immediate future is well restored.

dence in the immediate future is well restored.

Primary cotton goods markets have had four successive weeks of record activity—greater in volume of sales than any previous weeks in nearly a year. Accumulations of goods in almost all lines have been well cleaned up and mills have been able to assemble a sufficient volume of forward orders to warrant production on a stightly increased scale in many places.

on a slightly increased scale in many places.

Prices have improved very radically in most styles of goods. Starting from a level that was known to be substantially below the cost of production, they have gained steadily in the more active constructions, as buyers realized that there was no likelihood of lower levels and that the trend, for some time at least would be upward. While some lines have lagged behind the general market, the entire list has shown progress.

Retallers Conservative

Retailers Conservative

It has been the converters, printers and the producers of specialty fabrics that have bought heavily. The jobbers and retailers have been very conservative in their operations, as yet, confining purchases to immediate meeds, and it is the large replenishment business expected from these quarters that further progress in primary cotton goods markets is expected.

requirements for the new season yet uncovered.

The trading during last week has not been quite as large as it was during the three previous weeks, but in the aggregate sufficient business was put through to pile up a very respectable total. These consisted chiefly of a large number of small and modera exized orders rather than of big individual transactions. There has been enough buying to keep the market firm in nearly all sections.

In the print cloth market, there was considerable activity, and particularly in eastern-made stoods. Fall River reported sales for the week eatimated in the neighborhood of 175,000 pieces, which was very much in excess of the current rate of production, and promised resumption of activity on machingry there which has been die for some weeks.

Trading in 80 squares ranged be-ween 10% c and 10% c, an advance of fore than % c over the previous week's sween, while standard 30% sinch 64x60s were up % to 7% c and 72x70s at %c. The slight decrease in per share earnings on the common—33.40. compared with $3.47 in the preceding 12 months—was due entirely to an increase of $20,754 shares in common outstanding June 30, compared with June 30, 1925. On the average amount of common outstanding during the 12 months ended June 30, per share earnings were $3.54.

Of the increase in common outstanding June 30, nearly 60 per cent was issued for acquisition of new properties; the remainder was issued in payment of dividends on the common.

Appropriations for depreciation reserves during the 12 months exceeded $11,000,00, or more than 10 per cent of gross. Balance earried to surplus after All dividends and deductions was $3.597,658, an increase of over 24 per cent.

AND INDUSTRY HOLDS UP WELL

OTTAWA, Aug. 3 (Special)-Trade and industry throughout Canada are holding up well. The summer lull is less apparent this year than for many less apparent this year than for many years past.

Most of the business indicators show unusual activity for this time of the year. Industries in eastern Canada are generally speeding up. Car loadings are considerably in advance of this time last year and railway earnings are touching new peaks.

Commercial loans by the banks are increasing, thereby reflecting expanding business. Construction continues active in practically every section of the Dominion.

Demostic Trade fined

Domestic Trade Good

Domestic Trade Good

Domestic trade continues good.
Throughout the Province of Ontario retail trade has been making quite a favorable comparison with that at this time last year, and summer stocks have been well reduced. Wholesalers report the receipt of a steady run of moderate sized orders for replenishment, and buying for fall and winter delivery is improving gradually.

Dealers throughout the Province of Quebec report that business has been helped by the presence of many tourists from the United States. With the improved conditions, collections are fairly satisfactory.

Optimism is general throughout western Canada. Discussing this altuation, Charles Murphy, general manager of the Canadian Pacific western lines, safd: "For many years western Canada has not been so optimistic regarding conditions as it now is.

"This condition is particularly noticeable on the Pacific coast. It is very largely the result of the splendid crop conditions prevailing is about two weeks ahead of the average, thus reducing possibilities of later damage to the standing grain."

development. To give an accurate idea of the position of this steel as a British industry it is necessary to give a short outline of its complete history.

As far as can be ascertained, the actual discovery of a form of rustless steel was first made by Sir Robert Hadfield in 1896. Unfortunately, however, he did not continue this line of investigation, being greatly occupied with the development of his manganese steel.

this line of investigation, being greatly occupied with the development of his manganess steel.

In Central Europe one big corporation also produced a nearly noncorrodible steel for gun barrels. Little, however, was heard of this metal until 1913, when Harry Brearley, as chief of Thomas Firths & Sons, Ltd., and John Browns combined research laboratories, who was investigating the question of erosion of gun barrels, found that some of these steels, containing percentages of chromium within a certain limited range—10 per cent. to 14 per cent.—were highly resistant to corrosion.

Mr. Brearley, shortly after this, left the Firths firm to join the staff of J. Brown Bayleys, Ltd., of Sheffeld, as works manager, and for a period, owing to pressure of duties, he did not give much time to the development of this new alloy steel. Neverthless, réalizing the extraordinary virtue it would have for household purposes, he pursuaded

THIRTY ROQUE PLAYERS ENTER

Predict Largest Tournament in History of Sport -Haydn Leads

WINONA LAKE, Ind., Aug. 3 (Special)—Thirty players, representing all parts of the United States, were entered in the national roque tournament here when the second day's play was started this morning. W. A. Rounds of Cleveland, president of the American Roque League, and W. I. Pierce of Warsaw, secretary, predicted today that the tournament will be the largest ever staged in the history of roque.

Three divisions have been organized and, if the expectations of the league officials are fulfilled, it may be necessary to play the first division in two sections in order to complete play during the two weeks set apart for the tournament. Under the rules of roque each player must meet every other player in his division.

Hiram Haydn, of Cleveland, O., was leading in the first division when play started today. He passed through the first day's play with three victories to his credit, defeating C. R. Zimmerman, of Warsaw, 32 to 29; W. A. Rounds of Cleveland, 32 to 15, and J. E. Schreiner of Cleveland, 32 to 15.

Mrs. Ann L. Whitney of Cumberland Center, Me., American woman roque champion, took her first two games in the second division, defeating J. R. Edwards of Cleveland and E. E. Neel, of Newport, Ind., by decisive scores, Mrs. T. D. Reeder of Long Beach, Calif., the only other woman entered so far, also won her first game, defeating C. E. Klick of Cherokee, Okla., by two points. She is playing in the third division. The summary:

defeating the efforts of a woman to conquer it.

Beaten by fog rather than the swift current, Miss Clarabelle Barrett of New Rochelle, a swimming teacher in New York's high schools, today was forced to give up her attempt to swim the Channel after a gallant struggle that lasted 21h., 35m.

When at length she was taken from the water she was within two miles of her goal, Cape Gris Nez and had established what is claimed as a record for women for the duration of a channel attempt.

Miss Barret started her swim from Dover yesterday morning at 8 o'clock and battled with the channel waters, which have thus far turned back every woman aspirant, until 5:30 o'clock this morning.

morning.
Using a powerful "crawl" stroke,
Miss Barrett was making good progress until 10 o'clock last night, when a rienced channel pilot to lose his way on several occasions and preventing Miss Barretts following a direct course. Between the fog and the current, Miss Barrett covered between 30 and 40 miles.

Had it not been for the fog those who accompanied her believe that she would have achieved success.

Dr. George Brewster of London, who started a channel attempt three hours after Miss Barrett had taken off from Dover, gave up his effort about five hours later when a dense fog set in. He had made five miles during the first three hours of his swim.

Y., Aug. 16-21, and he two Chicago tournaments at the a Salle Hotel, Aug. 21-Sept. 2. are he next important events scheduled in the chess world. Capublanca, Marhall and Torre are expected to participate in the Chicago naster event, and it is reported that little Sammy Excechewsky, the brilliant child player of a few years ago, will also take part.

Rzoschewsky, the brilliant child player of a few years ago, will also take part. As he has not been actively engaged in chess for the last few years. It would seem an injustice to the child to enter him in so strong r. field. That he has great talent goes without raying, but he would have almost to-accomplish the impossible to succeed without practice in this company. The Southampton (England) C. C. Championship was taken by W. J. Fry when he defeated the former holder, F. J. H. Elwell, in the playoff of the

Rosedale Club Expert Captures the Professional Championship With 139

MONTREAL. Que. Aug. 3 (Special)
—James Johnstone of the Rosedsle Club of Toronto wom the Canadian prefessional golf championship here at the Summerlea course, when he turned in a card of 139 for the 38 holes, his 70 in the morning equaling par for the course and his afternoon round being one under par. Johnstone has been in Canada only three years and is one of the most pformising of the younger professionals. Some years ago he won the championship was decided under adwerse conditions there being a steady rain throughout the day, which caused the scores to be somewhat higher than anticipated; but Johnstone found the conditions apparently to his liking, as he finished eight strokes in front of Arthur Hulbert of the Thornhill Club of Toronto, who was one stroke in front of Andrew Kay, another Toronto professional.

The people of the United States were invited, not long ago, by various wet politicians and alcoholic propagandists, to consider the peculiar virtues of the Canadian method of dealing with the liquor problem. Especially were they urged to admire the Quebec law as the final expression of supreme wisdom on the subject. They were told that this superlegislative code had eliminated the saloon, abolished the bootlegger, decreased drunkenness, checked crime, swelled the public revenues, and conserved that individual liberty which is depicted as perishing in the United States for lack of alcoholic stimulant.

It is hard to recall a prescription of a foreign political nostrum which ever gained such swift and general popularity in the United States. Uncounted people who had never been north of New Jersey fervently insisted that all ills resulting from violation of the Prohibition Law would be healed could they but try Quebec's quick cure. Statesmen, seeking office and desirous of both wet and merely damp votes-like Mr. Wadsworth of New York-pinned their faith and staked their fortunes on it, without any very precise knowledge of what it was or what it did.

Precise knowledge, however, is exactly what robs the Quebec law of its glamour. During the past three weeks The Christian Science Monitor has been publishing a series of articles giving the result of investigations carried on in Canada by a most competent investigator. The situation in the various provinces of the Dominion from Nova Scotia to British Columbia was carefully observed, and the opinions of officials intrusted with the administration of the law in its various forms was sought. It is not extreme to say in conclusion that experience in Canada is demonstrating daily that efforts to thus compromise with the liquor power are always futile, and that any half-way point between unrestricted license and absolute prohibition is encompassed by precisely the same criminal attacks upon the law as are manifested when the effort is made to enforce complete prohibition. None of the liquor laws in force in the various provinces is satisfactory. The wets are as pertinacious in their endeavors to overthrow and nullify the "moderate" legislation of Ontario as they are in their assaults upon prohibition in the United States. And the "liberal" law, that of Quebec, held up as ideal by the adherents of liquor in the United States, not only fails to accomplish any of the good so loudly claimed for it, but is riddled by the criminal activities of bootleggers, just as is the Volstead Act in the United States.

Let us summarize some of the facts concerning the Quebec law set forth by the Monitor's

It has steadily increased the volume of legiti-mate sales of liquor since it was enacted.

It has given the Province of Quebec, with a population scarcely one-third that of New York, 1280 drinking places operating 12 hours a day. It has greatly encouraged the practice of public drinking among women. It has put the Government into the saloon business and made the bartender as much of a public functionary as the postmaster or an army officer. It has developed the "tavern," which presents all the characteristics of the old-time saloon except the bar and brass rail. It defeats local option by permitting legal exportation of liquor from wet districts into neighboring dry territory. It encourages bootlegging by supplying the bootlegger with his stock and his market. It furnishes "hard liquor" in unlimited quantities to anyone who will buy and carry it away. night the liqu politics by making the State the only customer for brewers and distillers. But why continue? The facts elicited by the Monitor's investigation, facts which are all clearly on record and easy of further verification, utterly overthrow the contention that the Quebec law has any virtues that would prove effective if applied in the United States, Further advocacy of its imitation here by American politicians will be evidence only of willful ignorance or a sinister intent to deceive.

Youth of these days, called "modern" because it is of the present, has been the subject of much surprising comment, wondering speculation and not a little unwarranted criticism. Observation beneath the surface by older folk who remember their own younger days and who have read history with some discrimination, will disclose that the youth of these times is different in no essential particulars from that of the past. Young folk now are full of abounding energy, feel keenly the spur of impulse, long for progress, knowledge, and self-expression in action, just as young folk always have done. It will be well for both the present and the future of any nation for its leaders to take advantage of these qualities of youth, guide them aright and use them profitably, rather than by carping and destructive criticism to discourage the young of today, who are to be the builders and doers of to-

Youth a Public Asset

It will help those who fail to understand youth to take note of some of its finer and higher manifestations, which are often lost sight of in the rush of daily events. The story of Paul Ungrodt, "kid mayor" of the little city of Washburn, Wis., is an excellent case in point Graduating from Lawrence College, Appleton, Wis., in 1923, he returned to his home town and went into his father's hardware store as joint manager—a college boy applying his educational training to practical business. The city had fallen into many governmental troubles, mainly financial. In the spring of 1924, when Paul was 23 years old, came an election. The "boy" ten months out of college was chosen

Mayor by a two-to-one vote over a man thrice his age. Youth and college training apparently did not frighten his fellow townsmen.

The "kid mayor" of Washburn and his councilmen, served without salary. All expenses were cut to a minimum. The tax rate was raised to 7.15 per cent, the highest in the State. Tax collections were increased $12,000. The city began to get on its financial feet. In the second year the tax rate was reduced to 5.15 per cent. The city's debt was scaled down from $100,000 to $25,000 in two years. The town is now on a firm financial foundation for the first time since before the war. Paul's youthful energy and enthusiasm were not confined to the city's business. While hardware dealers in the Northwest were experiencing an average decrease in sales of 5 per cent, the Ungrodt store won an increase of 25 per cent. Did the city of Washburn, Wis., appreciate its "kid mayor" It did. It has just re-elected him by a practically unanimous vote.

Many cities, big and little, in the country have their governmental troubles. Perhaps it would help them to take a leaf or two from Washburn's book. They need not take the first lively boy out of college and put him in the mayor's chair. But they will do well not to be afraid of youth or college training. "Big business" is learning the value of the trained energy of youth. Communities should do likewise. If young folk find that their abilities and their forward-looking vision are appreciated, that they are trusted by their elders and that their abounding energies can be turned to account in doing essential, worth-while things of life, they will divert their thoughts and their powers in such directions more and more, and away from nonessential and frivolous activities to their own and the country's great benefit.

As one studies the interesting abstract disclosing the prosperous condition of American railroads, there is quite naturally recalled the general discussion indulged in by experts and politicians two or three years ago as to the best means by which a seemingly serious economic condition might be met and overcome. Even then there were those who sought to quiet the prevailing public unrest by insisting that the officials responsible for the management of these lines would eventually, if allowed to do so, restore their properties to their former prosperous and dividend-paying basis. Now that this has been accomplished by many of the larger carriers, with the promise of continued and even greater prosperity, the arguments once put forward in urging the complete federalization of these systems are all but forgotten. What could not be theoretically shown to be impractical or unadvisable seems to have been proved by results to have been unwise and visionary under normal economic conditions in the United States.

It may be insisted, of course, that the greater prosperity and consequent stabilization of the carrier companies has resulted from the unusual prosperity which all branches of productive industry have enjoyed during the last few years. But it should not be forgotten that industry would have been seriously hampered without the constructive co-operation of the railroads as well as their subsidiary and other independent carriers. No more striking example could be cited to show the correlation of industry as a whole. No-doubt productive industry, when prosperous, would tend to make measurably efficient a system of public-owned or public-controlled carriers. But it is not at all certain that, lacking the stimulus of competition, the service rendered would be as efficient or as helpful as that rendered by the prevailing method.

Without questioning the willingness of any subsidized or publicly-controlled system to provide extraordinary carrying facilities in time of emergency or in case of an unexpected unusual demand, it must be said in support of the policies adopted by American railroads as at present operated that they have been proved effective and efficient upon many occasions when heavy demands have been made upon the facilities pro vided. Quite recently, it will be remembered, news dispatches sent out from towns and cities in the wheat belt told of uneasiness felt because of the sudden demand for cars to convey the large grain crop from the farms to the elevators and mills. Advices which almost immediately followed assured the public that the need had been met and that necessary cars were being provided when called for.

The just reward of alertness and efficiency is that prosperity which the carrying roads are now found to be enjoying. No one will begrudge them this reasonable and fair compensation.

Manifestly it would be unfair, as President Coolidge wisely observes, to charge the representative people of France, for instance, with responsibility for the manifestations of hostility toward American tourists, or to insist that those travelers in foreign countries who have, perhaps by their own acts and by their own attitude of thought, incurred the temporary displeasure of some of their hosts reflect the considerate sentiment of the American people. The vacation tourist, usually with plenty of money in his pocket and willing to spend it liberally while it lasts, is sometimes quite a different person, outwardly, from what he is at home. It can be understood that indiscreet globe-trotters, anxious to impress their assumed individuality upon those who perhaps may seem to be less fortunately circumstanced than themselves; might unduly excite the envy of ignorant or excitable persons themselves cannot enjoy. The President is quick to disclaim responsi-bility for or approval of the acts or utterances of those Americans who have placed themselves in uncomfortable or embarrassing positions by their own shortsightedness. He puts American tourists into two distinct and separate classes. The first he labels as "bumptious." If these can get some education abroad, and if they can dis-

A New

who begrudge them a privilege which they cover that there are other people besides Americans who are entitled to respect and consideration, their visits may not do permanent harm. Those of the second class show a keen appreciation of the amenities that prevail in good society everywhere, and are wise enough, when they fail to find conditions abroad to their liking, to return home.

That President Coolidge has thought it necessary to express himself thus clearly regarding a matter which might seem to be of no great importance ordinarily, indicates his realization of the desirability of fostering and encouraging, rather than interrupting, that continuous friendship which has existed between European peoples and those of America. At no previous time has it been more desirable than now that those friendly relations be preserved. Personal hatreds and jealousies surely should not be permitted to grow and be magnified. And it is reassuring, no doubt, that the President is convinced that the fault, if any exists, is not that of the people of France or any other country, so much as of those modern "innocents abroad" who seem inclined to forget their customary good manners just at the wrong time.

In Eloquent

by the remarkable impetus of speechmaking in the United States House of Representatives. Congress had adjourned, but the Record kept right on printing speeches. The members had all gone home—and yet (by the Record) Congress was still in session. Such is the custom, and it is easy for anybody to overlook the modest caption, "extension of remarks," which technically explains the prodigy and theoretically justifies the expense. unspoken orations appearing in the July 16 issue of the Record," writes the correspondent, "every one of them beginning 'Mr. Speaker,' entailed a printing cost, at $24 a column, of $5213 for the Government. This was thirteen days after Congress had adjourned. The issue of July 12, only eight days after adjournment, presented an even larger burst of silent oratory, the total for that day being $5574."

By these circumstances it happens that many readers who rarely if ever see the Congressional Record will be interested in this silent session, of which Cicero might have said, "Cum, tacent clamant"-their silence is eloquent. The mute orators numbered forty-nine Republicans, forty-five Democrats, two Farmer-Laborites, and one Philippine Nationalist. The printing bill amounted to nearly $13,000, which, of course, is a small sum per capita for the taxpayers. It may be argued, indeed, that an earnest warn-ing of the disasters that will follow any immediate change of party control in Congress ought to be worth $428 to a great and interested nation; and that $50 is not too much for a fine unspoken speech on "The Child and the Motion Picture." "Every conceivable subject, it seems," says the correspondent, "was 'discussed,' ranging all the way from agricultural relief, the tariff and Mammoth Cave, to prohibition, the boll weevil, and Sunday blue laws for the District of Columbia." Yet some will perhaps criticize the member who included $40 worth of poetical quotation in his $450.50 worth of orations; and some may feel that the Nation as a whole should not pay for printing the unuttered speech of the gentleman whose silent oratory was all for praise of the splendid district that had sent him to Congress.

One may doubt that this silent session was expected when the Constitution provided that each House should keep a journal of its proceedings; or, for that matter, that the journal was meant to include a good many other things that get into the Record. At the same time, our present human state being at once so promising and so imperfect, there is nothing profoundly discouraging in this ready response to the siren song of personal and party publicity at the public expense. Especially when one realizes that so many representatives went home and left no words behind them.

Editorial Notes

Those people who say half-jokingly that, even though airplanes are said to be quite safe today, the railroad is good enough for them, may be interested to learn that Edsel Ford, vice-president of the Ford Motor Company and director of its aviation branch, gave it as his opinion the other day that the airplane would never crowd out the railway. Of course, one must remember that the industry is in its infancy, but it looks as if it would be a fong time before every family would have a flivver of the air, as has been forecast, unless some exceedingly radical changes are made in the manufacture of such machines, as the cost of the airplanes being turned out of the Ford factories is $37,000 apiece. Just the same one only has to look back less than thirty years to the time when an automobile to each family would have sounded like the wildest flight of the imagination. And yet this forecast is not so very far from realization today. What the future will hold for the airplane it would be rash to predict, though it is fairly safe to say that the next ten or fifteen years will show advances that even today one hesitates to suggest as possibilities.

It is a significant ruling that a London magistrate has recently handed down in dismissing an automobile association scout who was charged with warning motorists of the existence of a speed trap. The policeman who had made the arrest complained, it appears, that soon after he established the trap in the outskirts of London the scout came through on a bicycle and turned around to warn oncoming motorists. As a result, he said, the motorists all came through the speed trap at about five miles an hour, making fun of him the while. The association in question maintains a large number of scouts on bicycles and in automo biles on the various roads around London, and there exists a certain code between these men and the motorists with the badge of the association on their radiators. And now any doubt as to the legality of warning a man who is about to break the law has apparently been removed.

The Diary of a Political Pilgrim

FROM A LONDON CORRESPONDENT

POR the moment the coal strike in England is over-shadowed by the financial crisis in France. The tenth Briand Ministry has fallen, because the Chamber of the New World was built out of capital advanced by shareholders in ber refused to give M. Vaillaux the powers he needed to stabilize the franc, and the seemingly endless process of building another Ministry out of the parliamentary ma-terials which have failed so often before has been begun over again. M. Briand's tenth Cabinet only lasted twenty-four days. Since November 28 he has formed three ministries and has had four Ministers of Finance!

The main feeling in Great Britain is bewilderment. Such an exhibition of political instability, if it were manifested in the English-speaking world, would be regarded as fatal. But long association with their allies during the war has taught the British that there are many different ways of doing the same thing. Though they do not, perhaps, understand the mental processes of their French neighbors, they have a profound respect for their fundamental capacity.

I think that the main feeling here is that at the last moment, by some method inconceivable to the Anglo-Saxon mind, France will save the position and astonish the world. It may be even by the return of M. Poincaré supported by Socialist votes, or by some system of tem-porary veiled dictatorship. But somehow or other, when necessity drives, France will find the way through as she did so often during the war.

British public opinion is becoming reconciled to the perpetual whittling away of its debt claims against its war-time allies. First Great Britain abandoned some twothirds of its claims against France. Then it reduced its bill against Italy in still larger proportion. And now, under stress of France's financial difficulties, it has opened the door to still further reductions in what it is to get from France by admitting that if Germany defaults, the Anglo-French debt settlement may have to be reconsidered.

Anglo-French debt settlement may have to be reconsidered. This process is inevitable, because British opinion has never been able to persuade itself that a war debt could be or ought to be treated as a commercial proposition. And being of that opinion, it has not been difficult for its allies to squeeze it to make concessions by various kinds of ad misericordiam appeals.

Just lately a good deal of attention has been given to utterances by Mr. Mellon and others which tend to show that a change is coming over official American opinion about its interally debt policy. As represented by the cables, the opinion seems to be growing across the Atlantic that a prosperous Europe, able to buy American products, is worth more to American industry than ican products, is worth more to American industry than a less prosperous Europe buying fewer American goods. This has certainly always been one element in the British

There has also been a good deal of discussion lately about another international phenomenon of growing importance, what is sometimes called economic imperialism. During the last century Great Britain was the great international capitalist. She was the one nation which had a surplus of capital available for investment in

In this century it is the United States which is taking the position of the great international capitalist. Great Britain is saving much less than she did before the war. The European peoples are all short of capital for their own purposes. The United States is the one great reservoir of capital in the world, and the growing flow of its investments outward is one of the most striking phenomena of the last few years.

Yet foreign investment on a large scale produces very far-reaching consequences. It means that a large part of the vital assets of one country are owned and controlled by foreigners who live in other countries and who are principally interested in its affairs so that they may draw ar dividends from their property. That is a state regular dividends from their property. Inat is a state of affairs which has begun to provoke some resentment, especially since Bolshevist propaganda has brought the implications home to the public consciousness.

The future really depends upon the way in which the foreign investor does his job. If he tries to squeeze the maximum profit out of its holding; if he tries to influence politics for his own financial ends; if he attempts to regarize diplomatic pressure in his own interests, there is organize diplomatic pressure in his own interests, there is sure to be international resentment and trouble. If he seeks that the public and his employees in the foreign land share, and share fairly, in any prosperity he may enjoy, then the charge of financial imperialism begins to

The passing of Miss Gertrude Bell removes a very remarkable figure from British life. Always interested in Oriental archæology, she first came into notice by the boldness and persistence of her Eastern travelings at a time when the travel of unaccompanied women was not as safe and easy as it is today. But her life work was only undertaken after the war, when she joined the little band of Britons who set to work to reorganize the new Arab state of Irak, just released from Turkish rule.

Miss Gertrude Bell became one of the dominant influences in a piece of reconstruction work which history may place alongside the work done by Lord Cromer in an earlier day in Egypt. Her knowledge of the people, her energy and enthusiasm, her indomitable spirit, her zeal for the education and the sanitary uplift of the population, had an immense effect in humanizing the administration of Irak and in saving it from becoming wooden, as the much vaster Indian administration has too often

It also played a vital part in bringing about that altera-It also played a vital part in bringing about that altera-tion in British colonial policy which has been almost a revolution since the war, the alteration which seeks at any cost of immediate trouble and lessened efficiency to train the local peoples to manage their own affairs for themselves. Gertrude Bell is perhaps the first woman who has gained an international reputation as an Ori-ental administrator. Her name will certainly not soon be forgotten by the people of Irak.

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Paris

THERE are some wise remarks in the pages which Clemenceau is contributing to a Paris weekly journal prior to their publication in volume form under the title of "In the Eventide of Thought." There is here and there a tinge of the cynicism of which he is often accused but on the whole, if Clemenceau likes to pitch his philosophy on not too high a keynote, he has an unquestionable nobility of thought. He discusses such subjects as authority, liberty, and tolerance. Authority has its place in government. Liberty itself, though dear, must sometimes be restricted. But tolerance seems to make a special appeal to Clemenceau. A typical passage—with which one may disagree but which has its virtue—is as follows:

Hitherto men have been asked, without much success, to love each other. They might perhaps be less slow to understand the immense advantage of tolerating each other. To help them on this path they should be remigided sometimes that they are interdependent and that neither good nor ill can happen to our neighbor without some reaction upon ourselves. Having grasped these two facts—that tolerance facilitates and even beautifies life, and that universal solidarity binds us together in all the accidents of toy and sorrow—we hold in our hands, it would seem, the keys of our civilization.

Paris has been overrun with Moroccan visitors. One meets bronze-faced men in white burnous at almost every street corner. They appear to take the greatest interest in the busy life of the boulevards. The opening of a Moslem mosque in the city has rightly been criticized on the ground that it is not for the French authorities to give prestige to Islam. Yet such considerations apart, it is indeed a remarkable architectural acquisition. Its dainty minaret stands above an Oriental garden with green-hued mosaic paths and marble fountains. There are delicate marble columns and walls decorated with variegated faience. There are shaded galleries with deather the decimal standard designs. dentelated carvings and arabesque designs. One cannot but admire the strange beauty of a rare piece of work.

A French student has been chosen to take a trip around the world. This is due to the generosity of Albert Kahn, who has always shown the keenest interest in educational who has always shown the keenest interest in educational matters and has endowed several interesting institutions, and, above all, has by gifts to the University of Paris encouraged educational travel. He has placed on the present occasion a sum of 100,000 franes at the disposal of the selected student. The commission which considered the candidates was composed of the rector of the university, Raymond Poincaré, Marshal Pétain, Baron Seillière and others. They singled out M. Dennery, a student about to leave the Ecole Normale Supérieure.

Paris honors its poets. There are few cities in the world which are so faithful to the singers, and in the Luxembourg Garden there are countless busts. Gatherings before these busts are frequent. The other day there was a large muster of Les Amis de Verlaine to pay tribute to the author of "Sagesse" and some of the most lilting lyrics in the French language. Several poets of the day recited verses composed by themselves in honor of Verlaine, and the best known actresses declaimed the poems of le pauvre Lélian. Almost at the same time a similar manifestation in honor of La Fontaine, whose simple fables are so well known, was held in the Bois de Boulogne. French school children are brought up, as it were, on La Fontaine and know by heart his little moral stories in which the personages are animals. in which the personages are animals.

A curious point has arisen in connection with the purchases of American and other visitors. They have made, ever since the war, the most extensive purchases of what are described as luxury articles. Now there is a special tax on luxury articles. But it was announced in 1920 that the tax was not due on exported goods. The practice has sprung up, therefore, of forwarding the goods to the steamships on which the visitors intended to leave the country. Suddenly it is asked whether such parcels are exports or not. The tax has not been charged hitherto. The authorities claim that the purchase having been made in Paris by persons in Paris, the tax is chargeable. The mere dispatch of a parcel to a ship is not in itself a proof of export. Claims running back as far as three years are being made by the revenue officials, and it would seem that they are legally in the right.

New publicity devices constantly make their appearance. The other day on the boulevards there was to be seen a traveling cinema. It was operated from a covered van. Inside was a projector which threw pictures on a transparent screen behind. Some hundreds of feet of film were run off at every halting place. Crowds congregated to read the pictorial announcements. After a short performance the automobile van went away to another spot to renew the performance. It would seem to be in its kind an excellent method of publicity in a town which has of recent years learned almost everything there is to know about publicity—in which the Eiffel Tower itself luminously advertises a motorcar and aviators write names in the sky!

A Constitutional Party and Its Obligations To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitors:

A Monitor correspondent writing from Oakland, Calif, suggests the need for a new party in politics, to be known as the Constitutional Party, having for its militant purpose, the enforcement of the laws of the land, particularly the prohibition law, which has its authority in the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The writer isn't much of a politician and has had no experience in statesmanship, but he would like to offer some suggestions to such a party, in the event that it becomes a reality among the political parties of the United States.

First, the Government should support with might and main every honest public official, from police officers to judges of courts, in their efforts to capture, convict and punish men who, for financial gain, violate the laws of the land and in the smallest degree prostitute the citizenship punish men who, for financial gain, violate the laws of the land and in the smallest degree prostitute the citizenship of our country.

Secondly, genuine, honest service should be required from every public official under pay, and severe penalties should be applied in cases where it can be shown that for any reason officials, high or low, have been negligent in their duties, or have received pay from lawbreakers to permit them to continue their law-defying practices.

The purchaser should be counted a victim rather than a willful violator of the law. His punishment, if he be punished at all, should be much lighter than that of the officials mentioned above, and in cases where he assists the Government to detect and bring to book either of the others he should not be punished at all.

Thirdly, these domestic policies instituted, the Government should turn its attention to the question of a policy of relationship with foreign countries and foreigners. The Constitutional Party should, when installed in office, notify all foreign governments that the United States has adopted a prohibition law and the Eighteenth Amendment to the Nation's Constitution. The governments of the world should be politely advised that the people of the United States are serious about these things and that they propose that the law shall not be violated nor the Constitution annulled by the practices of any character of lawbreaker over which their Government can exercise control.

If these be accounted drastic suggestions, may it be

If these be accounted drastic suggestions, may it be asked: What need for a party with a militant program for law enforcement unless it be recognized that the situation is drastic and that the boasts of law violators call for a drastic program? Drastic but necessary, might be a proper way in which to refer to or describe it.
